That seems a vague question because awareness isn't a tangible thing to reach out and grab-but at the same time, it's not magic. So what about the phrase I think, therefore I am, as Rene Descartes said; is that the answer? I'm aware that it's happening, therefore awareness is something? Instead of explaining awareness just yet, let's try this approach: how long will it take the entire world, with its global Internet, media, and telecommunications system, to be as fast as the human brain? Twenty-five, fifty, maybe a hundred years? Given enough time and with absolute connectivity, would everything that is lucid in the world become part of a massive unified portal-a global intelligence? Could it be that the speed at which everything connects is all that it would take for this entire system to become a fully conscious superorganism? Well, it may not be that simple, considering the complexity of the brain. Many parts of the brain have yet to appear in our global collective, but there are similarities. The information retrieval or Google part of the brain is there. Through telephones, computers, and even TV ratings, we are like neurons responding to stimulus. Political news can send the political forums into a panic, or an earthquake can activate a plethora of healing entities oozing into the affected area. Add it all up and it's like a global brain responding to stimuli. Of course it's not in real time yet, but it's growing, connections are getting faster, and I'm sure there are many flavors of technology yet to be developed. At the core of human...
