They gave their time and material for no other pay than love, and when finished, the cottage was the best building on the island. We fixed it up quite prettily, and the people delighted in it as much as we. One wot., went home and tried to arrange her house as nearly like ours as she could, but it was hard work to repress a smile, while calling on her, to see the Perry pictures turned upside down. To show that we appreciated what had been done for us, we took turns, and some one lived in the house for a month. We often had twenty or twenty-five girls¹ with us at a time, and the Kusaians showed that they appreciated having us live at their village by keeping us supplied with more food than we could use. Every morning after their native ovens were opened up a number of cocoanut trays would be sent in with enough cooked food to last through the day. The king would call on us every day to see if there was anything he could do for us or get for us that would in any way make us more comfortable. His nephew was asked to get us a large stone for a doorstep. He saw a nice flat one in the king s wall, and what did he do but go and take that, and leave an opening in the...
