So he also teaches when he quotes the sad words addressed by Elijah to God, I am left alone, and they seek my life, or soul (psyche). So far from thinking the psyche inaccessible, both Paul and Elijah agreed in thinking it exposed to the attacks of men to kill and to destroy it. John teaches us the same truth in the book of Revelation, where, from the adjective living, attached to the Greek psyche, our unfortunate translators were unable to avoid the use of the word soul, which, in every similar case where they could help it, they have scrupulously shunned. Every living soul died in the sea. Here we are told that in natural death the soul dies, and this expression is all the stronger from having the adjective living attached to soul. t Once more, John tells us plainly that all souls, whether of the righteous or the wicked, after death continue without life until the resurrection. In Rev. xx. 4, he tells us that, in the prophetic vision of the future with which he was favoured, he saw the souls of them that were beheaded in a living state. He goes on, in verse 5, to speak of other souls. He tells us that these latter did not live again until after a certain period. Hence we gather of the former that they had been raised to life, i.e., had been without life, in...
